

Finch Feeding Tips:

Unlike most other birds that come to our feeders, Goldfinches eat seed almost exclusively. In fact, unlike many other Finches, Goldfinch chicks are fed few, if any, insects. Instead, they get the same seeds their parents eat. When a parent returns to feed its young, its crop is full of partially digested seed (enough to feed the whole brood). Because of the amount of food brought each time, the young are only fed twice each hour. Perched at, and around, the feeders, Goldfinches eat seed after seed. It gives us a wonderful opportunity to watch them at length. We love the Songbird Essentials™ Spiral Feeder as it has more openings per inch of feeder than standard “Perch Restricted” feeders. Also, its “Flip N’Fill™” feature means you can fill it from the top one time, and the bottom the next. This means seed never gets old in the bottom of the feeder. Many people come in and complain “Finches” don’t eat the seed at the bottom. This happens when seed gets packed down and draws moisture when always filled from the top. Either get a Songbird Essentials feeder or remember to dump out and mix old seed in the bottom of the feeder with new seed and then refill. Both solutions will help you attract more Finches.

One of the keys to keeping Goldfinches around is eliminating their need to compete. Goldfinches will often just give up and fly away when other species crowd around a feeder. To enjoy Finches when they are bright gold, many people put out “extra” Finch Feeders utilizing inexpensive thistle sacks.

Gardening for Goldfinches

Habitat can also be a key to attracting Goldfinches. When utilized you do less work, not more. Don’t worry about dandelions! Goldfinches love ’em! Also, don’t cut off the tops of your Marigolds, Zinnias, Cosmos, or Coneflowers as Goldfinches love these as well.

Tips to Attracting Goldfinches To Your Backyard!

A favorite backyard songbird is the American Goldfinch... adored for their lemony color, graceful flight and enchanting song.

Many people call this bird the “Wild Canary.” Much of the public don’t realize that Goldfinches are not bright gold “all” year.

As the nesting season winds down and fall colors begin to appear, Goldfinches molt. That is, they replace their worn, tattered feathers with a set of fresh, new feathers.

The appearance of males changes drastically at this time. The brilliant yellow body feathers are replaced by dull brownish plumes and the striking black cap disappears. Females also molt, but their appearance doesn’t change.

Goldfinches wearing drab winter plumage flock to bird feeders.

Keep Finch feeders out year-round to enjoy their bright colors during warmer months.

Goldfinch Facts

What is a group of these birds called? A charm of Goldfinches...

Goldfinches are primarily monogamous birds, but a few females will seek a different partner after producing the first brood. These prolific females leave their original mate behind to raise their fledglings, while they journey off to start a new family.

The American Goldfinch is the only member of its family to complete two full molts a year. All other species only molt once in the fall, but Goldfinches undergo a total molt of their body feathers in the spring as well (just in time for breeding season).

When other songbirds are finished with breeding season, the American Goldfinch is just getting started! They are one of the latest birds to breed (typically waiting until late June or early July).

You can encourage Goldfinches to nest in your yard by providing nest material including the following:

Nyer Seed resembles grains of wild rice and is covered by Goldfinches for its high fat and protein content. House Finches, Purple Finches, Towhees, Pine Siskins, and Juncos enjoy a little Nyer in their diet. Nyer imported into the United States has been heated to prevent it from germinating; thus, seed sprouting is not a concern.

Mixing Nyer seed with fine-chopped Sunflower Kernels reduces the mess on the yard and patio. Also, Pine Siskins, and others, like it better than straight Nyer. All Finch mixes require a special feeder with very small openings. Some of the best ones are listed on this page.
